SECOND READING

2 PETER 1:16-19

ALLELUIA (5:00PM & 8:30AM)

Cantor, then all:

℣. Candor est lucis aeternae, speculum sine macula, et imago bonitatis illius.

℟. He is the brightness of eternal light, the unspotted mirror, and the image of His goodness.

A note about the Gregorian Alleluia: much more elaborate than the Alleluia refrain at today's other Masses (which is taken from the Divine Office), The elongated last "-ia" syllable of the chant, called a "jubilus", is a musical allegory for the never-ending song of the heavenly choirs worshipping the Holy Trinity.*

ABOUT TODAY'S MUSIC

Today we celebrate the Transfiguration of the Lord, one of the few feasts in the liturgical calendar that supplants a Sunday of the Year. As such, we see its importance in the eyes of the Church. The only other time in the liturgical year that we hear today's account with any regularity is on the Second Sunday of Lent. There are some outstanding chants in the repertoire for Transfiguration, and so Cathedral Choir rejoins us (just for this week) to offer these contributions from the Gregorian repertoire. We also hear Mozart's stunning setting of Psalm 118 from Vespers. "Laudate Dominum" from his Solemn Vespers is one of the most famous soprano solos in the repertoire and features one of the most beautiful (and demanding) melodies in any sacred aria. William Harris' anthem "Behold, the tabernacle of God" is a reminder that we can find Jesus Christ's true, substantial presence in the tabernacle of this Cathedral every day. This amazing gift is what the prophets and apostles looked toward. The Church's texts, as found in the orations, readings, and antiphon texts, all try to instill in us a hope for heaven. The beautiful verse from Wisdom sung at the Alleluia at 11AM Mass is a prime example of this, and of how we find "types" of the New Covenant in the Old Testament. We can also be assured of the presence of the entire Communion of Saints at every Mass; a way we show unity with them is the liturgical use of the Gregorian settings of the Ordinary of the Mass. When we sing these settings (in this case, Mass VIII, popularly known as "Missa de Angelis" or "Mass of the Angels"), we remind ourselves that the Catholic faith is truly ever ancient, ever new. The voluntary after Mass is the first movement from Mendelssohn's Third Sonata for Organ. This piece, in A-B-A form, was written for Fanny Mendelssohn's (Felix's sister) wedding, and is one of the greatest pieces one can use for such an occasion! The middle "B" section is based on the "De profundis/Out of the depths" (Psalm 130) text and tune that would have been familiar to German Protestants of that time. One does not attempt to discern what Felix meant in this strange juxtaposition of themes!
