ABOUT TODAY'S MUSIC

Today we celebrate the Fourth Sunday of Easter, celebrated as “Good Shepherd Sunday” in the Ordinary Form of the Roman Rite due to its many references to our Lord Jesus Christ as the Good Shepherd (alleluia verse, gospel, and communion antiphon especially). John Rutter’s setting of Psalm 23 is also sung at the 11AM Mass at communion. Using the lovely Coverdale translation of the Psalm, it uses many evocative and contrasting musical ideas to “paint” this favorite psalm. Another use of this text in Mass this weekend is the hymn tune ST. COLUMBA, often paired with the hymn “The King of love my Shepherd is”. A bit of trivia: many do not realize that “hymn” actually refers exclusively to the text of the hymn, which always has an associated “meter”, or pulse, that sets a rhyme scheme. The music which is used is actually the “hymn tune”. One even sees this in Roman (Latin) hymnody, where there are subtle variations (or even entirely different tunes) for the Pange lingua, for example (the version we use is a Roman tune, whereas the Spanish and Portuguese traditionally have a totally different, unique tune). You may have also noticed that we are using the same Kyrie setting that was used last Eastertide. This Gregorian setting, nicknamed “Lux et origo”, has been in use for the Easter season for almost a millennium. It may, at first, seem somewhat unfamiliar in melodic contour; this is because it is very modal, that is, it is not in a modern “key”. The modal system (in various forms) goes back to ancient Greece, and is used across many Christian traditions, especially in the East. This modality is often unfamiliar, even exotic, to our ears, but should be seen as another “flavor” to be used in the liturgy. On the other hand, Mass VIII (used for the other movements of the ordinary this weekend) is basically in a major key so, in spite of its much more complicated melody, we find it more familiar! Finally, we “preview” the Marian month of May, in a manner of speaking, by using a Marian closing hymn. This May, we will celebrate many feasts relating to the Holy Trinity, and so in this way we can honor Our Lady and venerate the Holy Trinity fully!
