ABOUT TODAY'S MUSIC

This weekend, we enjoy a variety of music from nearly every Western sacred music genre. The Second Vatican Council and Pope Paul VI, in particular, commended the use of the Gregorian ordinary (Kyrie, Gloria, Sanctus, and Agnus Dei) as a way of drawing Catholics together from many disparate communities and ways of life. We continue to follow this directive as we use the Kyrie of Mass XI (nicknamed Orbis Factor) at all our Sunday Masses. The remainder of the Mass Ordinary is from a contemporary English-language setting familiar to all of us. We also hear a number of English hymns. Ralph Vaughan Williams, the famous English composer, wrote the tune (KING'S WESTON) of the entrance hymn expressly for the text "At the name of Jesus", and a felicitous pairing it is. The hymn tune builds toward the end, pairing perfectly with the similarly dramatic text. The choral introit at 11AM is a composition of Healey Willan, one of the most prolific composers of traditional English-language liturgical music. An Englishman who spent much of his career in Canada, Willan was heavily influenced by the Gregorian chant revival and Tractarian movement in Anglicanism. His compositions also show the influence of Renaissance polyphony, modal harmony, and many other Catholic forms. Although an Anglican his entire life, things come full circle: his estate and compositions now rest with the (Catholic) Church of St. John Cantius in Chicago. We also hear a contemporary setting of Psalm 139 (offertory at 5 & 8:30), a chant arrangement of the communion antiphon in English (5 & 8:30), a Gregorian communion antiphon (11:00), and a Latin polyphonic motet (11:00 offertory). Palestrina's motet setting of Psalm 139 is one of his most colorful pieces. Often criticized as being a rather dispassionate composer (at least compared to his Spanish and English counterparts), Palestrina certainly pulled out all the stops with this text. The mysterious imitative entrance of parts at the beginning of the motet is almost like people calling to each other across the banks of the Babylon River. When the text "illic sedimus" ("we sat down") appears, all parts join in homophony to emphasize the sadness of their exile. Then, they "remember Zion" in a new section, alternately singing together and calling out in imitation. The final section of the motet is one of remarkable rhythmic interest for Palestrina. The overlapping parts on the text "suspendimus organa nostra" ("we hung up our instruments/harps/etc.") create syncopations which continue nearly unabated to the end of the motet. It is rather exotic as the morose text combines with an almost dance-like feel (as if the Israelites were remembering their past times of joy even as they were forced to put down the instruments of joy). The voluntary after Mass is taken from Marcel Dupré's famous collection of organ settings inspired by Vespers of the Feast of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary. Claude Johnson, general manager of Rolls-Royce at the time, heard Dupré play these pieces at Vespers at Notre-Dame de Paris on the Feast of the Assumption in 1919. After Vespers, he requested a copy of the music—but was informed that none was available, as all the incidental music for that Vespers was improvised! Not discouraged in the least, Mr. Johnson prevailed upon Dupré to write down the improvisations, and commissioned (with a cash advance!) the set on the spot. Mr. Johnson's boldness, vision, and financial generosity thus made possible one of the greatest collections of liturgical organ music of the 20th Century! The two settings played today are two of the more introspective settings, based on the antiphons of the psalmody of Vespers which are themselves taken from the Song of Songs. We hope you enjoy them!
