ABOUT TODAY'S MUSIC

Our music at 11am today features German composer Josef Rheinberger. A close friend of both Brahms and Wagner (which, knowing both composers, was a real accomplishment!), Rheinberger was one of the most important 19th Century German composers and musicians. His music is not well-known in the US, but for Catholics, his Masses in particular are a landmark of our musical heritage. Well-developed without being extravagant, this Mass in E is a more modest composition, but has many beautiful moments. The Benedictus is particularly lovely (sung during communion in this case), but the entire Mass is certainly worthy of more frequent performance. Rheinberger shows his compositional acumen with effective counterpoint and gesture, but also situates the Mass in the Romantic aesthetic with its constantly changing, free performance aesthetic. Rheinberger's lovely setting of the Lenten votive antiphon Ave Regina Caelorum is also sung at the postcommunion. It is a gentle, introspective setting of this moving text. Brahms contributes the closing voluntary: an early piece, his Prelude and Fugue in g is an obvious homage to Bach in name, but the style is all Brahms. By suppressing the French voices of the pipe organ, we can accentuate the more Germanic facets of the Anna Catharine Grace Memorial Organ. The young Brahms, very brash and excited, shines through here, but the piece certainly transcends the composer's work for organ, leading to a glorious climax. Happy Mardi Gras!
